For Immediate Release–October 29, 2009 Hyannis, MA–Beginning November 8th Cape Air, one of the largest independent airlines in the United States, launches air service from Lambert–St. Louis International Airport to Cape Girardeau, Missouri and the towns of Quincy and Marion, Illinois. “A Cape Air welcome to the mid–west,” says Cape Air founder and CEO, Dan Wolf. “This is an exciting move for all of us. Our aircraft are in place and pilots, along with our airport personnel, are ready to greet our mid–west passengers and introduce everyone to Cape Air’s singular brand of MOCHA HAGoTDI* service. In addition, we are thrilled to re–introduce the American Airlines code to our new communities. Final details of Cape Air’s agreement with American are still being finalized but we expect Cape Air will be operating with the AA code by early spring.” Wolf added.

“Having a code share agreement with American Airlines already in place shows Cape Air’s commitment to restoring reliable air service to Marion and Quincy,” said U.S. Senator Dick Durbin (D-IL). “Once Cape Air takes over next month, travelers in these two communities will have a convenient way to connect from St. Louis to their final destinations. This is a long-awaited improvement and I congratulate American, Cape Air, and the communities for their tireless efforts to make this happen.”

Cape Air tickets are available at capeair.com or 800-352- 0714. (No charge to talk to a Cape Air Reservations Agent) Ticketing also soon available at various distribution sites including Expedia and Travelocity. All ticket prices on all routes are $49 one way, $98 round trip*
